He's a beautiful German shepherd with dark tan fur and black markings on his head and neck. His handler, Patrick, tells us about a day in the life of a K9.

"Kenzie and I work the night shift," says Patrick. "Our workday starts at 5 pm and ends at 3 am. Kenzie sleeps in the same room as me because I like to know that he's sleeping and not playing! We usually get up at around noon and have our breakfast. Kenzie always has high-quality dry dog food and water. After breakfast, Kenzie sometimes plays with my other dog – another German shepherd – and enjoys his time off.

Before we go to work, Kenzie and I spend some time training. There is a lot of training and testing involved in being a K9, but Kenzie is on patrol for ten hours. He knows that this is not the time for playing or sleeping, so he remains alert at all times. Above all, his job is to protect me, but on special assignments he searches for criminals and looks for evidence. Kenzie does a great job. He's a real professional! He has a lot of experience in sniffing out criminals and is a great help in difficult situations. Kenzie even saved my life once when he stopped an armed suspect from attacking me. He's not only my hero, but his work is of great benefit to me and to the police force in general.

When our shift is over, Kenzie and I return to the station, and then we usually go home. Kenzie has his second meal at about 4:00 am and after that we go straight to bed. We have the same routine every day, which is good. Like all dogs, Kenzie loves having a set routine.

On our days off, Kenzie and I often travel together or do some training. We enjoy spending time together. Being a K9 handler requires a lot of commitment, but it's worth it. I think of Kenzie as my friend as well as my partner, and I'm sure he feels the same way about me."
